this volume uses the art of rome to help us understand the radical historical break between the fundamental ancient pre supposition that there is a natural world or cosmos situating human life and the equally fundamental modern emphasis on human imagination and its creative power rome s unique art history reveals a different side of the battle between ancients and moderns than that usually raised as an issue in the history of science and philosophy the book traces the idea of a cosmos in pre modern art in rome from the reception of greek art in the roman republic to the construction of the pantheon to early christian art and architecture it then sketches the disappearance of the presupposition of a cosmos in the high renaissance and baroque periods as creativity became a new ideal through discussions of the art and architecture that defines proto modern rome from michelangelo s terribilita in the sistine chapel caravaggio s realism baroque illusionism the infinities of borromini s architecture to the grand tour s representations of ruins through an interpretation of such major issues and works this book shows how modern art liberates us while leaving us feeling estranged from our grounding in the natural world the book will be of interest to scholars working in art history architectural history classics philosophy and early modern history and culture

how were space and movement in roman cities affected by economic life what can the study of roman urban landscapes tell us about the nature of the roman economy these are the central questions addressed in this volume while there exist many studies of roman urban space and of the roman economy rarely have the two topics been investigated together in a sustained fashion in this volume an international team of archaeologists and historians focuses explicitly on the economics of space and mobility in roman imperial cities in both italy and the provinces east and west employing many kinds of material and written evidence and a wide range of methodologies the contributors cast new light both on well known and on less explored sites with their direct focus on the everyday economic uses of urban spaces and the movements through them the contributors offer a fresh and innovative perspective on the workings of roman urban economies and on the debates concerning space in the roman world this volume will be of interest to archaeologists and historians both those studying the greco roman world and those focusing on urban economic space in other periods and places as well as to other scholars studying premodern urbanism and urban economies

Lors des fouilles archéologiques c'est le plus souvent sous forme fragmentaire que l'on retrouve les décors peints du monde romain. Quant aux peintures découvertes en place, il était d'usage à certaines périodes de les démanteler pour en emporter ce qu'on estimait le plus digne d'intérêt. C'est à l'histoire de ces fragments que s'intéresse cet ouvrage en interrogeant les transformations qu'ils subissent dans leur statut, comme dans leurs fonctions. Il était en effet courant dans l'antiquité de réemployer les revêtements détruits comme matériau de construction pour combler des structures, réaliser des niveaux de préparation de sol ou encore servir dans le blocage, voire dans les parements de murs. Ils perdaient alors leur fonction décorative qu'ils retrouvent par la suite entre les mains de l'archéologue qui tente de les reconstituer. Si la recherche a beaucoup progressé au cours des dernières décennies sur la reconstitution et l'étude des décors qui nous sont parvenus à l'état fragmentaire, elle a néanmoins prêté peu d'attention aux fragments en eux-mêmes, devenus un temps matériaux de remploi ou simples gravats. C'est précisément cette deuxième vie, tout aussi riche d'informations que la première sur les pratiques de la société romaine, qui est éclairée dans la première partie de l'ouvrage. Le statut esthétique et symbolique du fragment a également évolué au cours de l'histoire. Témoignage du monde antique, arraché à l'œuvre de l'homme et du temps, son incomplétude peut grever l'intérêt qu'on lui porte ou, au contraire, lui donner un caractère d'autant plus précieux que menacé. La seconde partie s'intéresse ainsi à l'évolution du statut du fragment de décor et de son traitement aux époques moderne et contemporaine. L'ambition est ainsi de participer à une réflexion plus large sur les pratiques de construction anciennes et sur les méthodes de restauration et conservation modernes et contemporaines.
